Third: That the defendant failed to notify an authority, such as a federal judge or some other federal civil or military authority, as soon as possible; and

IV. Stipulated Facts:

Omair Rafiq Chaudry's account of events and stipulation of facts is as follows:

Kroger Company (Kroger) was a national chain of grocery stores and food processing plants. Kroger wholly owned Vandervoorts Dairy Foods Company, (Vandervoorts), a dairy processing plant located in Fort Worth, Texas.

Rani Ismail Alabed was employed as the maintenance engineer at Vandervoorts in or about April 2014. As the Vandervoorts maintenance engineer, Alabed was responsible for the preventative maintenance program at the plant. Alabed had authority to create and approve purchase orders for plant repairs and maintenance, using engineers employed on-site at Vandervoorts or outside contractors. Once a purchase order was approved, it would be submitted via interstate wire to Kroger's Regional Accounting Center in Kansas for payment.

From in or about January 2014, until in or about September 2015, Alabed knowingly and willfully devised and executed a scheme and artifice to defraud and to obtain money and property from Kroger/Vandervoorts by means of materially false and fraudulent pretenses, representations, and promises.

Chaudry was a friend of Alabed. Alabed convinced him to set up Performance Industries, along with a bank account for the company. Alabed told Chaudry that “Danny,” an immigrant already employed as metal fabricator by an outside contractor at Vandervoorts, would do the work assigned to Performance. Alabed said that he wanted to create the business to employ Danny, who was underpaid and unhappy with his then-current employer, but could not open a business for himself.

The rationale for Chaudry’s involvement was that neither Alabed, nor Danny, could open a business to serve Vandervoorts because each would technically have a conflict of interest. In particular, given Alabed’s position at Vandervoorts, Alabed believed that having Performance Industries in his name would be a conflict because it would appear that Alabed would be granting contracts to himself. For Chaudry’s effort, Alabed told him to keep ten percent of the money received from Kroger. Chaudry considered Alabed a good family friend, who always was interested in helping others, so the plan did not arouse Chaudry’s suspicions.

It was part of Alabed’s scheme that Performance Industries would be set up in Chaudry’s name and that Chaudry would open an account at Navy Federal Credit Union on behalf of Performance, where he could deposit the Kroger payments. It was also part of the scheme that Chaudry would withdraw the bulk of the Kroger deposits in cash, and that Alabed would collect the cash from Chaudry. Chaudry, who had been told that Danny would be performing the work, did not know that the business was part of a scheme for Alabed to submit false documentation to Kroger showing that Performance had performed work at Vandervoorts when, in fact, it did not. In an interview of Alabed, he confirmed Chaudry's version of events.

Between November 19, 2014, and September 3, 2015, Alabed submitted, or caused to be submitted, 68 false requisition orders for Performance in Kroger's enterprise maintenance software. Alabed entered, or caused to be entered, these false requisition and purchase orders through the Vandervoorts computer system in Fort Worth, Texas. The false documentation was then transmitted electronically to a server in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Kroger paid Performance a total of approximately $203,924 between November 2014, and September 2015. Kroger mailed the checks from its Regional Accounting Center in Hutchinson, Kansas via the United States Postal Service to Chaudry's home in Fort Worth, Texas. Upon receipt, Chaudry deposited the checks into the credit union account he had opened for Performance. Chaudry's credit union account showed approximately $203,924 in deposits from Kroger and approximately $191,662 in cash/ATM withdrawals. Chaudry gave the cash he withdrew from the account to Alabed. The arrangement between Alabed and Chaudry continued for about ten months.

In early September 2015, however, Kroger fired Alabed for fraud. Alabed informed Chaudry that he had been fired from Kroger for stealing money; Alabed apologized for duping Chaudry into helping him; Alabed explained that there was no, "Danny;" Alabed stated no work on the Performance contracts actually had been done; and Alabed had pocketed the money Kroger paid to Performance. Alabed also told Chaudry not to talk with any investigators, as they could not prove anything. Alabed confirmed the substance of this account.

On October 17, 2016, while Chaudry was attending medical school in Antigua, an FBI Special Agent interviewed him regarding Vandervoorts/Performance Industries. Chaudry lied to the FBI agent to conceal the wire fraud, telling the agent that he did actual metal fabrication work for Kroger/Vandervoorts and ran the company out of his parents' garage. Chaudry did not report the wire fraud scheme, which was a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1343, to the FBI or other federal authority.

AGREED AND STIPULATED on this 6th day of May, 2017.
